

Explore your options and find your people in the PRSA Public Affairs and Government Section

Working as a professional communicator in a government role can be challenging and rewarding. Becoming a public affairs expert takes special people with finely honed skill sets.

The PRSA Public Affairs and Government (PAG) Professional Interest Section provides training and resources relevant to communicators at all levels of government, including:

- Local, state, federal, and tribal government bodies
- Branches of the military
- Public safety and law enforcement
- Organizations that are responsible for communicating about public policy
- Government relations – influencing public policy at all levels of government to achieve business objectives

Resources

The members of the PAG section develop and produce opportunities for learning and engagement throughout the year, such as:

- Members only newsletter
- Quarterly webinars
- Annual in-person Public Affairs and Government Summit event
- Volunteer opportunities
- Coaching and mentoring
- Networking with other members via social media and the MyPRSA online forum
- Engagement with PRSSA
- COMING SOON: Public Affairs Certificate Program

The PAG section has an active and engaged membership and warmly welcomes new members. Join us and “find your peeps!”

To learn more, go to <https://www.prsa.org/home/get-involved/professional-interest-sections/public-affairs-and-government-section>

What Your Peers Are Saying About the Public Affairs and Government Section:

“The Public Affairs and Government Section is rich in contacts, context and camaraderie. If you’re looking for depth of knowledge and breadth of experience across a wide range of engagement, our Section is for you!”

– Judith Webb, APR, U.S. Green Building Council

Executive Committee Chair

Lori Croy, APR
Missouri Department of Commerce and Insurance

Immediate Past Chair

Jennifer Pilkey Elting, APR
Northeast Ohio Regional Sewer District